SEEPEETZA

It is ironic that Seepeetza turns to the residential school's Christian teachings when she attempts to persuade her father to stop drinking and threatens him with hellfire and damnation: "Last night I talked to my Dad about God. He came home drunk and was hollering around as usual, so I got mad at him. I told him not to drink. I told him to pray. He looked at me for a long time. Then he sat down and looked at me with his face in his hands. At first I thought he was laughing. Then I thought maybe he was crying.
